FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE BRIEFED

DAVID BRINKLEY: "The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, wrestling with the same question, how to win in Viet Nam, or how to get out, had a briefing today by John McCone, head of the CIA. Then Chairman Fulbright said this:"

SENATOR FULBRIGHT WAS SEEN IN FILM CLIP, AS HE SPOKE.

FULBRIGHT: "I don't think the so-called anti-Americanism has, as yet certainly reached any great extent. That's a symbol of the chaos that exists within the country. I don't pretend to understand the political motivations of the people of Southeast Asia, but it's a very unstable area, and until they can develop a political structure there that will, as I say, command the support of the citizens within Viet Nam, there's not a great deal more that we can do.

"We supply them with aid and military might -- now at the moment I think we should go on and continue -- I don't know how long we can do this, unless we can turn it around and create a more stable political situation --"

BRINKLEY: "He also said he saw no evidence of another government overthrow about to happen."
